THE LIMITS OF SCIENCE AND HUMAN KNOWLEDGE

<http://ifiasa.org/en/EVENTS>

We would like to extend our warmest invitation to you to take part in the international conferences organised by IFIASA in 2021. The platform IFIASA has managed to unite the scientific researchers and professors in a discussion forum that we raised with the help of our partners to a very high standard, certificate by the multiple indexations in the most popular databases and numerous requests for topics.

Paradoxal, the theory of monism or dualism are the base of science. Monism opposes dualism and pluralism, which make the delimitation between body and soul, matter and soul, object and subject, which it denies through unionist fusion. As a scientific term, monism is first used by the philosopher Christian von Wolff (1679-1754) in the sense of specifying new types of thinking in the dichotomous problem of body and intellect. Christian Wolff differentiated three types of ontological metaphysics, regarding the spirit, the world and God.

In that reality exist limits in science or not?
